DEDICATED

To Sons and Daughters of Union Veterans of the Civil War. Hoping that their organization may go down the years hand in hand with Sons and Daughters of those, who through great trials and many years struggled to secure "The common rights of humanity against the divine rights of Kings", and brought forth this New Nation." To teach coming generations that this Union is one and indivisible, that all sons and daughters throughout this Nation be equally devoted to preservation of this Union of States under the one emblem selected by our forefathers, that the memory of bravery and sacrifice of ancestors in these wars, and the achievements of the immortal Washington and Lincoln may be cherished and maintained by generations that follow.

With the further hope that advancing civilization among Nations may soon send forth a decree that war shall be no more.

This summary of events during critical periods in our country's history is compiled and the manuscripts presented to George B. McClellan Camp Number 91, Son of Union Veterans, and to Mrs. John A. Logan, Tent Number 2, Daughters of Union Veterans of Alliance, Ohio

If believed to possess merit that will justify publication it is hoped that this offering may aid them in the noble aims and purposes for which they are organized, and be accepted as a token of love and gratitude from the rapidly fading line of Blue—that Grand Army of the Republic who saved our flag without the loss of a star.

Presented February 1924, the one hundred and ninety second anniversary of the birth of George Washington, and the one hundred and fifteenth of Abraham Lincoln.

Late Company "B" 104th. O. V. I. 1862-65

We have read with interest this condensed and unique history of the American Revolution and Civil Wars so ingeniously woven with the writers presentation of Lincoln's Gettysburg address, and with names of colonies from which "Our Fathers Brought Forth A New Nation."

Many of the events noted in "The Price He Paid" are days we celebrate, and the booklet will be a ready reference in securing dates, events, etc. It also provides a page for entering the service record in war of father or grandfather. This should be carefully filled out. To pass these records down to coming generations is a duty we owe them. To neglect this will be a source of regret to them in after years. It will be an inspiration and aid in the perpetuity of our organizations. These records will be the countersign that will pass our children through the lines to the ranks of Sons and Daughters of Union Veterans.

The writer has generously presented the manuscript to Sons and Daughters of the Union Veterans of 1861 to 1865 of Civil War and allied organizations for purpose he has named, and for which we extend our sincere thanks. INTRODUCTION

ABRAHAM LINCOLN

THE PRICE HE PAID

Is a compiled history of the American Civil War. An unique interweaving of Lincoln's Gettysburg Address, with the price he paid in blood and treasure to save our Nation. In this address we find two hundred and sixty-seven words, and near twelve hundred letters, each letter reflecting a battle fought, the shedding of blood, or other events connected with the war, many of which are not mentioned in history. In brief, "The Price He Paid" is a history of that war condensed to a nut-shell, the address itself a summary of the great sacrifice made to save the Union, and to destroy it. Events and statistics used in this compilation are largely taken from official records found in the War Department, where reports were received and recorded directly from fields of operation, three score years ago. Reading over the names of battles, with casualties given here in detail, will enable the reader to more fully realize the magnitude of the most deadly civil war known in history.

In compiling names of battles, we find a number were fought over the same grounds, at different dates, all bearing the same name. Many are known under different names, as Bull Run and Manassas, Murfreesboro and Stone River, Shiloh and Pittsburg Landing. The battle officially recorded as Chattanooga is often called Lookout Mountain or Missionary Ridge. Battles known as Ellison's Mills, Gaines Mill, Chickahominy, Savage Station, Nelson Farm, Fraziers Farm, Turkey Bend, Newmarket Cross Roads and Malvern Hill, Va. are officially recorded "The Seven Days Retreat." As far as possible these names are given in this compilation.

Losses given in battle were sometimes estimated and in minor engagements not always given on the enemy's side. Information giving losses suffered by the enemy was sometimes given by prisoners and deserters, or found in enemy newspapers, therefore not reliable. Comparing official records of casualties with statements made in a number of histories of the civil war, a wide difference is frequently found, so it was deemed the better way to compile this work almost entirely from records found in the War Department. This conclusion was arrived at when it was found that one historian had General J. D. Cox commanding a division of Union troops on the Georgia campaign and governing the State of Ohio during the same period. While another historian has a confederate general commanding a division of Union troops on the Atlanta campaign, and other errors are found.

It was not until the war closed, when a final summing up of casualties gave a more accurate account.

In this unique history of the Civil war is woven names of battles fought and their losses; number of enlistments from each State of the Union and losses in killed and died of wounds and disease; number of prisoners taken and losses by death in prisons; number of Negro and Indians enlisted and losses; secession of States and restoration to the Union; number of slaves set free, cost of the wars, etc.

Statistics will be found that are instructive, interesting and handy as ready reference. As a compilation of important events during twelve years struggle to found this Nation and protect it, the book will be a convenient text for the student. With the military service record of an ancestor entered on the blank page, it will be a pleasing gift to descendants who may follow down the years.

Reading down the initial letter of the lines one will find a brief address, quite disappointing to many listeners when delivered but now classed as a masterpiece in literature.

When Lincoln said in his Gettysburg address that "the world would little note, nor long remember what he said there," he had no thought that his words would live throughout the years. It seems to have taken time to measure Lincoln, fully. His sublime character, a standard for mankind, seems to unfold with the passing years. His life was one of unselfish devotion and sacrifice to his country. None can truthfully say that he had not moved with the thought of justice toward all in every act of his administration. His great power was always used on the side of mercy. Malice was foreign to his nature, it had no abiding place in him. His convictions were deep and strong. He denounced slavery as a self evident evil; a violation of the Divine will, threatening decay of the Nation, yet he pitied the slaveholder. He drew inspiration from history of deserted ruins, of dead empires, and the cause of their fall, so well and vividly described by an American traveler and writer who, standing amid these ruins said.

"Seeing on every hand the fallen pillars, I ask, why did they fall, why did the empire crumble? And the ghost of the past, the wisdom of the ages answers. These temples, these palaces, these cities, the ruins on which you stand were built by tyranny and injustice. The hands that built them were unpaid, the backs that bore the burden also bore the marks of the lash. They were built by slaves to satisfy the vanity and ambition of robbers. For these reasons they are dust. Their civilization was a lie. Their laws merely regulated robbery and established theft. They bought and sold the bodies and souls of men. And the mournful winds of desolation, sighing among these crumbling ruins is a voice of prophetic warning to those who would repeat the infamous experience, uttering the great truth that no Nation founded upon slavery, either of body or mind can stand."

Few men, if any, have said as much in so few words as we find in Lincoln's Gettysburg Address. His sincere, earnest and almost pathetic appeal to the public "to be there dedicated to the task remaining," came from one almost overwhelmed with the great responsibility of a Nation's life resting upon him, at the most critical period of its existence. Lincoln not only had the enemy in the South to contend with, but he had enemies in the North, and to add to these he was beset by pestilent, fanatical critics in the North. Little wonder that he expressed a willingness to exchange place with some private soldier in the ranks. But it had been his lot since boyhood to meet and overcome depressing hindrances, and these had prepared him to meet the ordeal through which he was passing. The crisis predicted by Lincoln had arrived. His was the guiding hand selected to meet that crisis.

Now, after the passing of three score years, we look back in wonder and amazement to the Presidential election of 1864. The war was then practically won, the Union was saved, and its blight of centuries removed, yet we find that near two million votes were cast against Lincoln in the loyal states, and three of these states were carried by his opponent. The soldier vote in the fields, and absence of the vote of eleven rebellious states, probably saved Lincoln from defeat at that time.

What the Union Army accomplished in the Civil War will go down with the history of the nation it saved. But there is an unwritten history of that war, written only in the memory of the soldier as he served on the firing line and in the trenches, there to remain and perish with him. His personal experience in the war could not be given in history, yet this is a part in which his children, down the years, will be deeply interested and concerned. His marches by day and by night, his fighting and digging his way to win the war, his hard marches under blistering rays of Southern mid-summer sun; his suffering while lying wounded and uncared for on the battle-field or his months of torture in the enemy's prisons.

History will not reveal to his posterity that he suffered any of these or that he was in the war. The untold story of sacrifice, suffering and valor resting in one hundred and fifty thousand graves of unidentified Union soldiers, and beneath the tide, with fates unknown and forever lost to widows, children or parents of these victims of war. Many, many distressing scenes of war, all so deeply engraved upon the memory of the soldier, finds no place in the annals of our country

It seems fitting that a few closing sentences of Lincoln's inaugural address and his emancipation proclamation should find a place here.

As a war measure he issued, in September, 1862, a warning to the States in rebellion that unless they ceased resistance to the legal authorities of the United States within one hundred days, all persons held in slavery in States then in rebellion would be declared free. This only fired the south with renewed determination to win the war and was followed by conscription of every man in the seceded States who was able to perform military duty. The great battles of Gettysburg, Chickamauga, Atlanta and many others followed until April, 1865 and close of the war.

On the 1st. day of January, 1863 the promised Emancipation Proclamation was issued to take effect in all States then in rebellion, and this finally resulted in freeing all slaves in the United States. After this declaration "that all persons held in slavery shall be thence forward and forever free." Lincoln closes the proclamation as follows,

"And upon this, sincerely believed to be an act of justice warranted by the Constitution upon military necessity, I invoke the considerate judgment of mankind and the gracious favor of Almighty God."

Lincoln's first inaugural address was delivered March 4, 1861, while slave states were passing ordinances of secession from the Union, seizing forts, arsenals and other government property in their States. In this address he made an earnest and strong appeal to the people of these States to remain loyal to the Union, but this appeal was unheeded by eleven States. The Stars and Stripes were shot down and war followed.

In closing this address Lincoln said, "In your hands, my dissatisfied countrymen, and not in mine, rests the momentous issue of civil war. The government will not assail you. You can have no conflict without yourselves being the aggressors. You have no oath registered in heaven to destroy the Government; while I shall have the most solemn one to preserve, protect and defend it.

I am loath to close. We are not enemies, but friends. We must not be enemies. Though passion may have strained, it must not break our bond of affection. The mystic chords of memory, stretching from every battlefield and patriot grave; to every living heart and hearthstone all over this broad land, will yet swell the chorus of the Union, when again touched, as it surely will be, by the better angels of our nature."

The second inaugural address was made four years later, when the war was near its close. It was then plainly seen that rebellion and human bondage was doomed. During this interval of four years about one million men were killed in battle, died of wounds or disease in hospitals and prisons, or maimed for life. Billions had been expended in war and wasted in destruction of property. No president has ever been so criticised by friends, or so bitterly assailed by enemies, both North and South, as fell to the lot of Lincoln. Yet not a word of censure to his defamers or critics do we find in any of his addresses, or toward those who were responsible for the great disaster that had befallen the nation. Lincoln's mind was then centered on "binding up the Nation's wounds, to bring a just and lasting peace." His sympathy for the vanquished, suffering and impoverished people who had brought this misery upon the Country, had effaced all feeling of animosity he might have felt during the struggle to save and wreck the Union. Could Lincoln have lived throughout his term of office, his efforts to remove, as far as possible, sad memories of the conflict, and his method of reconstruction of the States in rebellion, would no doubt have brought criticism, if not condemnation from radicals in the North, notably from those who were always more ready to criticise and give unsolicited advice than to shoulder a musket. When demands were made that Davis and other conspirators should be tried for treason and suffer its penalty, Lincolns only reply was, "Judge not that ye be not judged." This was the spirit of Lincoln as shown in his younger days when he was forced in self defense to chastise a bully, then brought water and bathed the wounds he had inflicted upon his vanquished foe.

The spirit of Lincoln manifested throughout Europe might aid in healing wounds from which that distressed country is now suffering.

The spirit of Lincoln lives on, an inspiration to his countrymen who "with malice toward none, with charity for all" are ministering to a suffering world.

Closing paragraphs of Lincoln's second inaugural address:

"Fondly do we hope, fervently do we pray, that this mighty scourge of war may speedily pass away. Yet if God wills it continue until all the wealth piled by the bondsman's two hundred and fifty years of unrequited toil shall be sunk, and every drop of blood drawn by the lash shall be paid for by another drawn with the sword, as was said three thousand years ago, so still it must be said, the judgments of the Lord are true and righteous altogether."

"With malice toward none, with charity for all, with firmness for the right, as God gives us to see the right, let us strive on to finish the work we are in; to bind up the Nation's wounds, to care for him who has borne the battle, and for his widow and orphans and do all which may achieve and cherish a just and lasting peace among ourselves and with all Nations."

Forty days after he delivered this address Lincoln found peace and rest. The assassin's hand, guided by treason and revenge accomplished its work and a Nation was left in mourning. Lincoln, the greatest American, passed on to the ages, to be remembered with reverence when graven marble has crumbled.

"Thy task is done; the bond are free;
We bear thee to an honored grave,
Whose proudest momument shall be
The broken fetters of the slave."

With pride we soldiers of the civil war share with the immortal Emancipator the honor of saving this Union, and with pride we leave to our children these personal records of our service as a precious heritage to become more and more a treasure to them with the passing years.

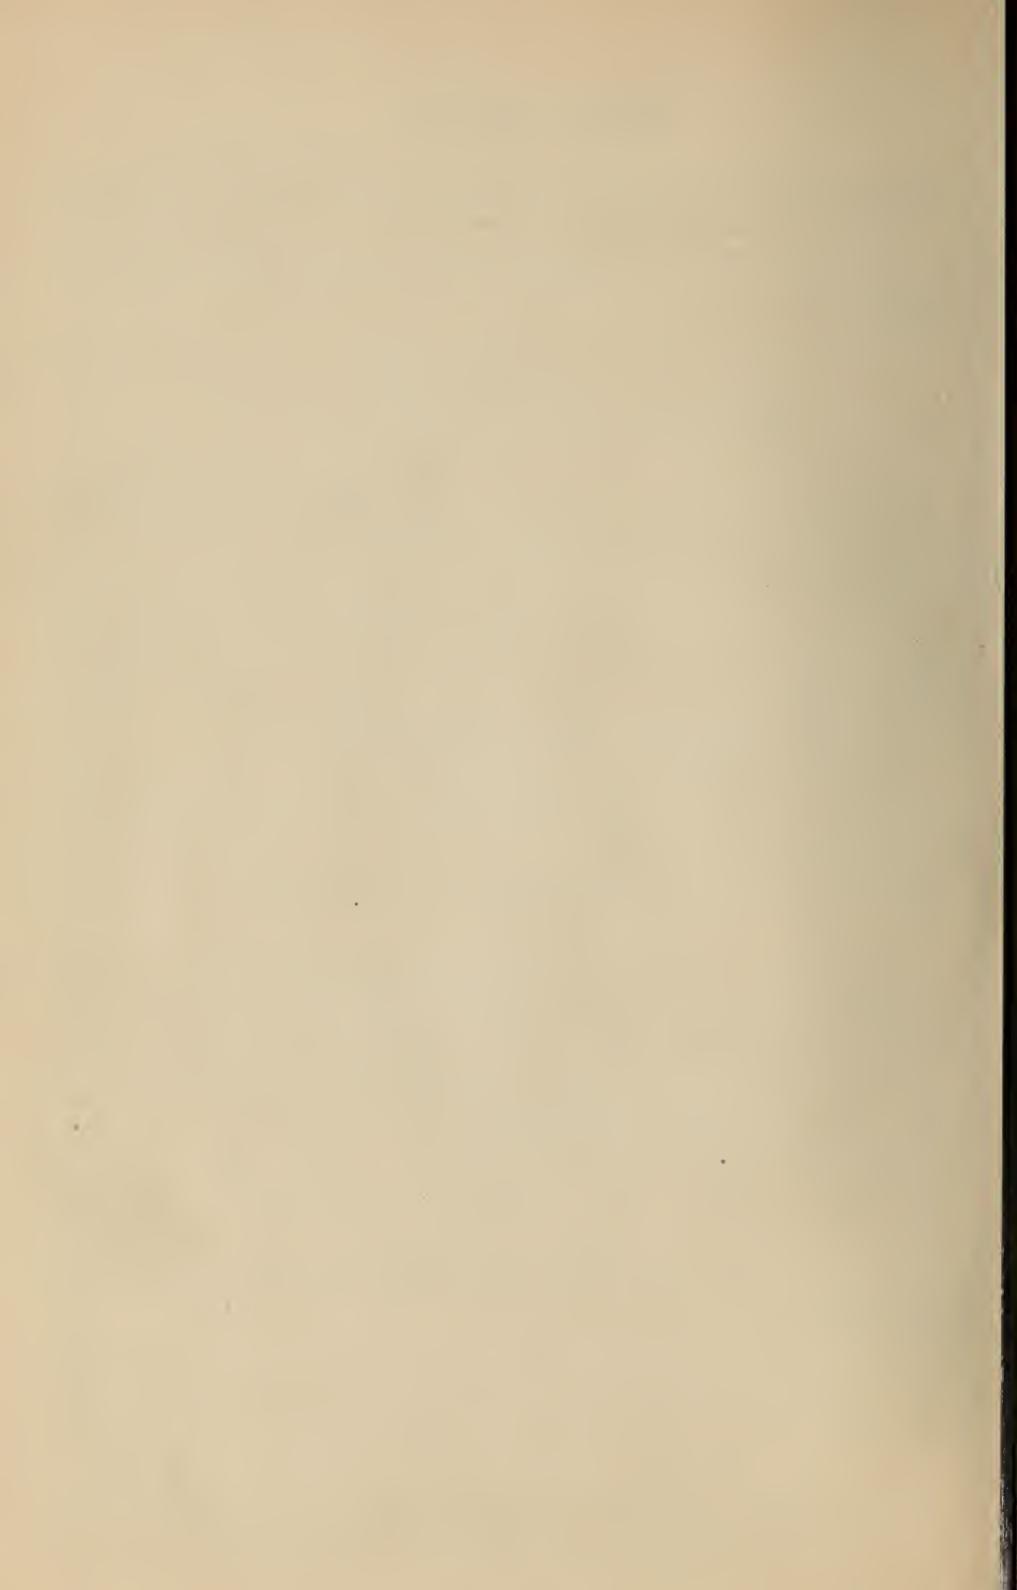

We cannot at this time realize how eagerly future generations will be seeking for records of ancestors who have served in our Nation's wars. For many years descendants of those who served under Washington have vainly sought for evidence that will admit them to the ranks of Sons and Daughters of the Revolution. Even now we find many descendants of civil war soldiers who have scant knowledge of their ancestors service in that war.

Fill out the blank page found in these books and pass them out to children, grandchildren and great grandchildren. This is a duty you owe to these children and to yourself. You will find that later generations are more interested than earlier ones.

DO NOT PERMIT YOUR SOLDIER RECORDS IN OUR COUNTRY'S WARS TO FADE AWAY AND PERISH.

Construction of an acrostic of Lincoln's Gettysburg address and the evolution of a new nation is rather a tedious, yet an interesting and instructive task. About sixteen hundred words must be found and placed in position. Events herein enumerated cover two periods in our country's history, from 1765 to 1790 and 1861 to 1865. Presented in this condensed form these events will be more deeply impressed upon the memory than if gathered by research through many pages of history.

Weaving of these events and names in the order in which they occurred has not been altogether successfully worked out, nor in the grouping of dates. Need of certain letters is largely supplied by a fortunate elasticity of the English language, and the over supply of other letters has been disposed of with the aid of names of States in which those events occurred.

OUR FATHERS BROUGHT FORTH

A NEW NATION

“Our Fathers Brought Forth A New Nation”

Summary of events leading to the founding of a new Nation, evolved from thirteen English colonies located on the continent of North America.

At the close of a war between England and France in 1763, a treaty of peace between these countries, gave to England that territory lying north of Florida and east of the Mississippi river and extending to the Atlantic ocean. During this war, and in past Indian wars, in aid to the mother country, these colonies contributed sixteen million dollars to the English war fund and lost in wars or murdered by Indians about thirty thousand soldiers and citizens.

For this service and sacrifice, the colonists were rewarded by the king of England with additional burdens placed upon them, in the way of taxation, the paying of heavy duties, the placing of restrictions upon commerce, and interfering with local government of the colonies. This was kept up amid turmoil and bloodshed for many years, until hope of relief was abandoned by the colonists. In 1776 a declaration of independence was passed by the Continental Congress, and the long struggle for freedom from the English yoke followed. During these years many English people opposed the king in his arbitrary ill treatment of the American colonists, but the House of Lords and the so-called nobility supported him in his determination to subjugate the Americans by force of arms.

The statement made in this Declaration of Independence that all men are created equal, seemed to awaken royalty ridden Europe. It was startling and alarming to the riders and a revelation to the ridden. Some one has said that “Princes and Lords are but the breath of Kings”, and on this breath rests the kings hope of perpetuating his ancient and decaying system of government. A number of European nations, formerly governed by rulers forced upon them by the accident of birth, have, since that time, abolished this antiquated form of government believing it to be a delusion and a menace to peace among nations.

But there was one Englishman to whom Americans should erect a memorial bearing an inscription of the noble prophetic words of warning delivered to the house of lords in England, July, 1775. This man was the venerable William Pitt, former premier of England. In reply to a bill of rights submitted to England by the American colonists, Mr. Pitt said, “When your lordships look at the papers transmitted us from America, when you consider their decency, firmness and wisdom, you cannot but respect their cause and wish to make it your own. For myself, I must avow that in all my reading—and I have read Thucydides and have studied and admired the Master states of the world—for solidity of reason, force of sagacity, wisdom of conclusion, under a complication of difficult circumstances, no Nation or body of men can stand in preference to the general congress at Philadelphia. The historians of Greece and Rome give us nothing equal to it and all attempts to impose servitude upon such a mighty continental nation must be in vain. We shall be forced ultimately to retract. Let us retract while we can, not when we must. These violent acts must be repealed. You will repeal them, I pledge my word for it. I stake my reputation on it, that you will in the end repeal them; avoid then the humiliating necessity."

But the house of lords did not retract, while the retracting was good. It suffered the humiliating necessity. It unwillingly founded a Nation then harrassed that Nation during its period of development and its domestic trouble, by giving aid and comfort to its enemies. It unwittingly founded a Nation that saved the mother country from great humiliation, if not disaster, one hundred and forty years later. It founded a Nation that has taken its place as the leading Nation of the earth, that has increased in wealth over all other Nations, that has increased in population from two and one half million to one hundred and ten million in a short period of time, as time is measured in the annals of Nations.

At the close of the Revolutionary war, Thomas Jefferson was sent abroad as Minister to a foreign country. Writing to a friend in America in 1789 he has this to say, "I was much an enemy to Monarchies before I came to Europe, and am ten thousand times more so since I have seen what they are. There is scarcely an evil known in these countries which may not be traced to their king as its source, nor a good which is not derived from the small fibres of republicanism existing among them. I can further say that there is not a crowned head in Europe whose talents or merits would entitle him to be elected a vestryman by the people of any American parish.  Our young Republic should besiege the throne of heaven with eternal prayers to extirpate from creation this class of human tigers, lions and mammoths, called kings, from whom, let him perish who does not say, Good Lord deliver us". He hoped that "revolutions would be established all over Europe to protect the people from royal idiots."

The great apostle of democracy seemed to be rough on royalty. He seldom missed an opportunity to twist the British lions tail. Yet, we know that the greatest war known in history can be traced to monarchial intrigue. We see what "tigers and lions" did for Europe during the last decade. Monarchies will live while its victims are submissive and pay homage to hocus pocus royalty and its assumption of superiority. This so-called royalty will never willingly move to compass its own destruction. Legislators are slow to antagonize the will of "His Imperial Majesty". They know not when "His Highness" may find it good policy to breathe a little of this so-called nobility upon them. Even Americans (or rather, American citizens) are found who are willing to exchange good money and accept bad bargains that they may add a little of nobility to the family.

It seems that the colonies of North America were ordained to lead on the highway of civilization and progress by proclaiming the self evident truth that all men are created equal; "that government derives its just power from the consent of the governed" or, as Lincoln defined it, "No man has the right to govern another man without that other man's consent."

In this acrostic of the thirteen colonies will be found names of fifty-six signers of the Declaration of Independence, giving year of birth and death; also battles fought by the Continentals to gain their independence, ending with the great general who led that army and became first president of the New Nation. When the war closed many of the signers had sacrificed their fortunes, and soldiers were unpaid.

Fourteen of these signers did not live to see their hopes of independence realized. But twenty-one lived to see the dawn of the new century. These patriotic statesmen and army of Continentals builded better than they knew or dreamed, perhaps, and could live to witness but a small measure of the wonderful development of their handiwork. Charles Carroll, last surviving signer of the Declaration of Independence died in 1832 at the age of ninety-five years, when the population of the United States was about equal that of the state of New York at the present time.

After enumerating the many causes leading to separation of the colonies from the mother country, the Continental Congress closes its appeal with the following paragraph in the Declaration of Independence:

"We therefore, the representatives of the United States of America, in Congress assembled, appealing to the supreme Judge of the World for the rectitude of our intentions, do, in the name and by the authority of the good people of the colonies, solemnly publish and declare that these colonies are and of right ought to be free and independent states, that they are absolved from all allegiance to the British crown, and that all political connection between them and the state of Great Britain is, and ought to be totally dissolved; that, as free and Independent States, they have full power to levy war, conclude peace, contract alliances, establish commerce, and do all other acts which independent States may of right do. And for the support of this declaration, and in the firm reliance of the protection of Divine Providence, WE MUTUALLY PLEDGE TO EACH OTHER OUR LIVES, OUR FORTUNES AND OUR SACRED HONOR".

Footprints Through Dixie

186 Pages

Is a story of the man under a musket, while in the camp, on the march, in the trenches and on the battle line. The story that cannot be written in history as it is written in his memory.

"Footprints Through Dixie" is compiled from the diary of a soldier who served three years in the ranks during the Civil War, describing incidents and scenes of army life and the life the soldier lived day by day. Character sketches, typical of soldiers found in every company in that grand old army.

A Comrade, ordering a second copy of the book as a gift to his grandson writes:

"The descriptive text in "Footprints Through Dixie" shows great care in preparation, and a wonderful knowledge of facts relating to the soldier's personal experience.

Each company had its lively fellows overflowing with fun; its sad and solemn chaps to carry the company's burden of grief; its many true heroes and very few skulkers.

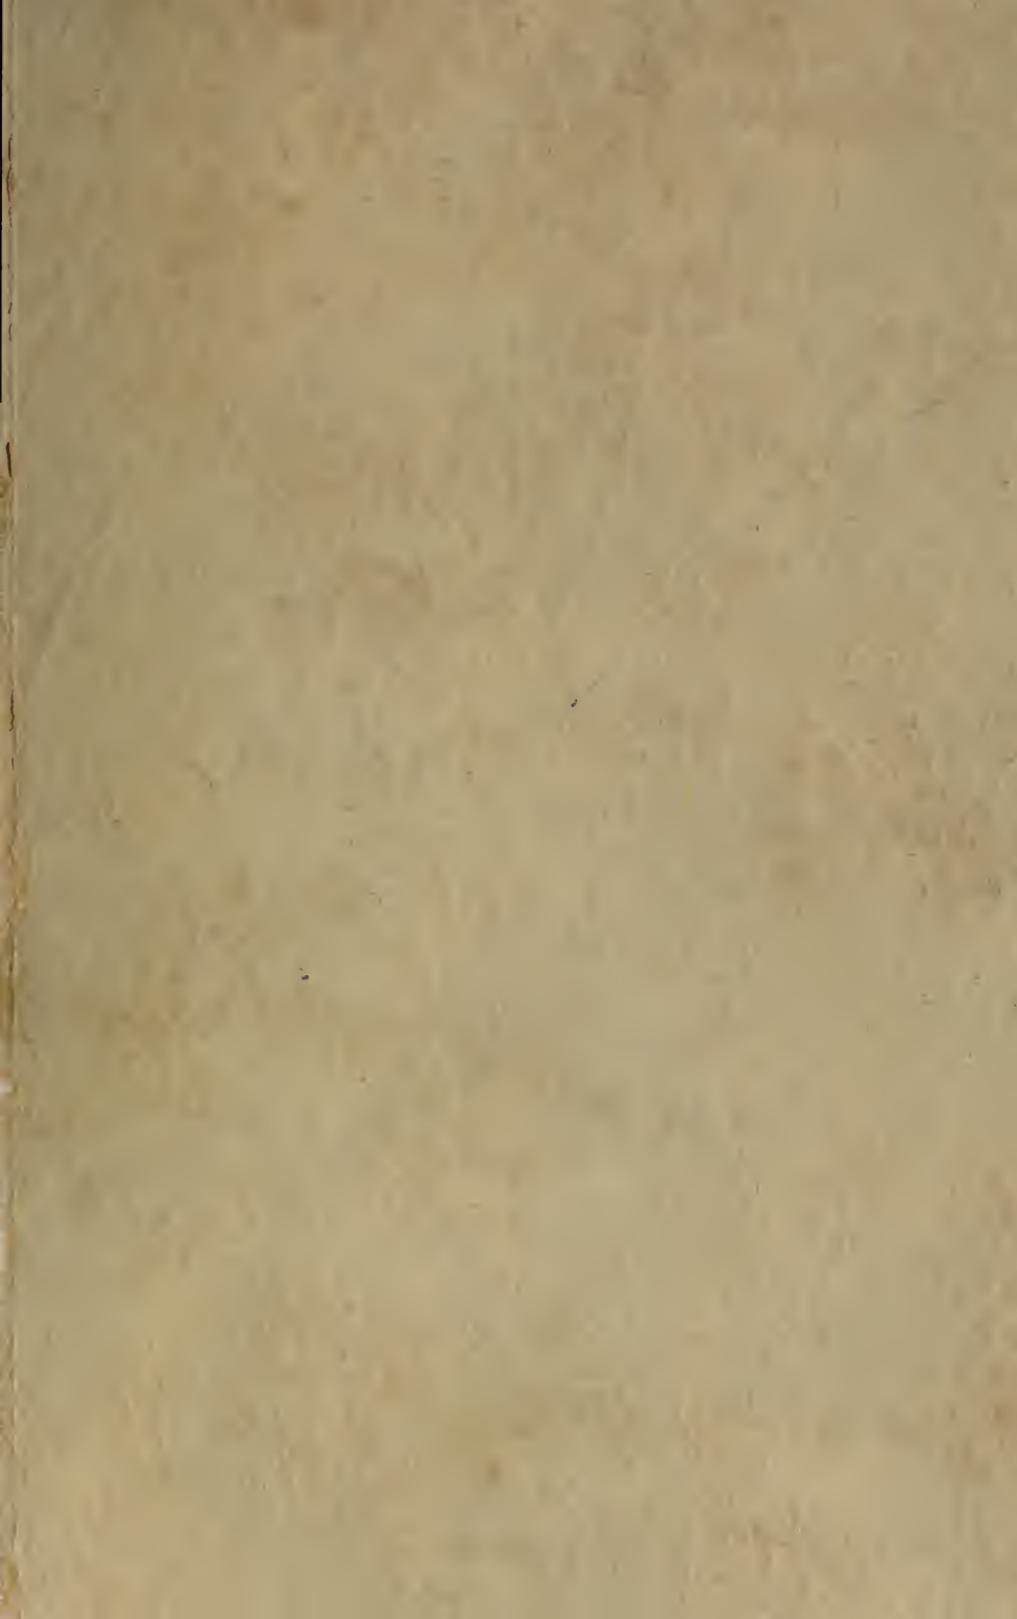

The illustrations show to a T the varied scenes of soldier life, so full of tragedy and comedy, and so true to the life we lived.

Price postpaid, $1.75, or $2.00 including "The Price He Paid"
